HIGH FIVE!!!

The Patriots came back from 25 points down to win championship No. 5 in overtime Sunday. Is it the greatest Super Bowl ever played? 2, 12 & 14

"We're bringing this sucker home," Tom Brady shouted after hoisting his fifth Super Bowl trophy. Sunday's game could go down as one of the best ever played. GETTY IMAGES

Reasons why Super Bowl LI was the best one ever

The Patriots scored 31 unanswered points in an incredible comeback win Sunday, earning their fifth Super Bowl crown.

Sunday's NFL Championship tilt between the Falcons and Patriots had all the makings of a stinker, as Atlanta's seemingly insurmountable lead and a potent Falcons pass rush had many watching commercials not football. But a comeback of epic proportions saw the Patriots overcome a 25-point deficit to earn a 32-28 victory in Super Bowl LI.

New England, following one of the most improbable comebacks in sports championship history, wasted no time in overtime, marching down the field to the 2-yard line where James White reached into the end zone, clinching Tom Brady's fifth Super Bowl title.

It was the second walk-off Super Bowl title in history (the Pat's also had the first).

1 The comeback

The spectacle that is the Super Bowl had entertainment value on and off the field — beginning with a valiant comeback effort from Tom Brady and New England, closing a 28-9 gap with a field goal early in the fourth quarter paired a forced fumble deep in Atlanta territory by Dont'a Hightower. Danny Amendola secured a touchdown catch at the 5:56 mark and a direct snap to James White cut it to a one-possession game.

Some questionable play-calling may have cost the Falcons an insurance field goal as New England got the ball back after some Atlanta movement with 3:30 to play. An incredible tipped pass fell securely into Julian Edelman's hands to keep the Pats' drive going, and a few plays later James White leaped into the end zone to cut it to two points. The two-point conversion tied it. New England scored 25 unanswered points over the last 16 minutes of regulation.

Brady went 43-for-62 for 466 YDS, and two touchdowns. His five Super Bowls are the most of any player in NFL history.

2 Falcons defense over, then underachieves

Watching the first 15 minutes, it would have not have occurred to a casual football fan that the Patriots and Falcons had two of the NFL's top-five offenses in 2016 — with Atlanta's one of the most prolific in history.

But a swap of punts, twice on each side, set the tone for an unexpected defensive battle. Things got even more shocking when Deion Jones forced a fumble on a LeGarrette Blunt rush, stopping New England's third drive flat near midfield. Devonta Freeman did the rest, finding his way into the end zone to put Atlanta on top 7-0.

Another three-and-out stop in the second catapulted the Falcons down the field yet again as Matt Ryan found Austin Hooper to boost it to a two-score game.

Robert Alford sent another shockwave to New England, when he returned an interception 82 yards for a pick-six and a three score lead.

In the second half it was a completely different story, as the defense allowed Brady to throw for the most yards for any quarterback in Super Bowl history. Most of these came in the second half to set up the first overtime in Super Bowl history.

3 A silent protest

Off the field, a protest of subtle and entertaining sorts took place between the halves. After a short rendition of the top end of Woody Guthrie's "This Land Is Your Land," Lady Gaga went through hit after hit, highlighted by "Born This Way." Without making any kind of political speech, the entertainer made a political speech. Well, she did say, "we're here to make you feel good."

Feeling good, for four hours (unless you're a Patriots fan) is the prescription Americans called for, and despite its one-sidedness Super Bowl LI delivered.

With strife, political discord and protests running rampant since the election of Donald Trump, the world's biggest sporting event was not immune to the seepage of politics into every facet of American life.

Commercials (which cost upward of $5.5 million this year for a 30 second spot) showed off America's diversity between the action too. From the multilingual Coca-Cola ad singing "America the Beautiful," to Google Home showing home is not traditional, Airbnb for reminding us that we all belong regardless of our differences and the 84Lumber leaving audiences hanging to watch the end which could be viewed on their website of a mother and daughter ending up after a long journey facing a wall. "Equal pay for equal work" was even the tagline for a car commercial.

Some green card, visa holders return to US after having been denied entry

Lufthansa airline is following an order by a federal judge who temporarily put a halt to Trump's travel ban for visa, green card holders.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Several visa and green card holders who had been barred from re-entering the U.S. under President Donald Trump's recent travel ban arrived Friday at Boston's Logan International Airport aboard Lufthansa airlines.

The travelers were helped by the efforts of the ACLU of Massachusetts, which won a seven-day injunction from a federal court judge on Monday, allowing them to enter. The ruling applies only to those who have valid U.S. visa and green cards, and are from the seven predominantly-Muslim countries cited in Trump's executive order.

Judges in New York, Washington and Virginia issued similar rulings, but the ACLU of Massachusetts' victory was deemed the strongest by immigration activists.

ders were still being observed by many airlines. Executives at those airlines feared fines or were still unsure about the court ruling.

German airline Lufthansa was the exception. It posted a notice to its website late this week detailing that "anyone with valid travel documents may board international Lufthansa flights bound for Boston — whether or not their entry into the United States is prohibited by President Trump's Executive Order on immigration," according to JustSecurity.org.

Volunteer lawyers started the website and Twitter account "Open Boston" to urge more airlines to board these stranded immigrants and refugees.

On Friday, ACLU of Massachusetts lawyers were in court, presenting their reasoning to a Boston judge for why the courts should continue blocking Trump's travel ban.

Meanwhile, about 30 immigration lawyers and supporters of the travelers went to Logan Airport to welcome those helped by the ACLU's lawsuit.

"We're here to offer assistance to people, to make sure that people getting on flights, know who they can talk to if they saw someone being barred from boarding," said Jaye Samuels, an attorney with Lawyers for Good Government, and part of Open Boston. Samuels was at Logan on Friday.

Sepideh Sanie, who is not an attorney, also was at Logan Friday afternoon to welcome the travelers.

"I'm just an Iranian coming here to here to support everyone who's worried about their status," Sanie said.

Massachusetts Congressman Jim McGovern, a Democrat, was also there, waiting to greet a doctorate student who is from Iran. The student has a visa and is studying at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, but had been in Germany for an internship, and was stuck there after the president's order took effect.

Derek Kouyoumjian and Reuters contributed to this report.

Trump steps up attack on judge, court system over travel ban

President Donald Trump on Sunday ramped up his criticism of a federal judge who blocked a travel ban on seven mainly Muslim nations and said courts were making border security harder, intensifying the first major legal battle of his presidency.

In a series of tweets that broadened his attack on the country's judiciary, Trump said Americans should blame District Judge James Robart and the court system if anything happened.

Trump did not elaborate on what threats the country potentially faced. He added that he had told the Department of

President Donald Trump smiles after signing executive orders. GETTY IMAGES

"I think it is best not to single out judges for criticism,"

Sen. Mitch McConnell

Homeland Security to "check people coming into our country VERY CAREFULLY. The courts are making the job very difficult!"

The president labeled Robart a "so-called judge" on Saturday, a day after the Seattle jurist issued a temporary restraining order that prevented enforcement of a 90-day ban on citizens from Iran, Iraq, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen and a 120-day bar on all refugees.

A federal appeals court later on Saturday denied the government's request for an immediate stay of the ruling.

Vice President Mike Pence defended Trump earlier on Sunday, even as some Republicans encouraged the businessman-turned-politician to tone down his broadsides against the judicial branch of government.

"The president of the United States has every right to criticize the other two branches of government," Pence said on NBC's "Meet the Press" program.

It is unusual for a sitting president to attack a member of the judiciary, which the Constitution designates as a check on the power of the executive branch and Congress.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, said Trump seems intent on precipitating a constitutional crisis.

Some Republicans also expressed discomfort with the situation.

"I think it is best not to single out judges for criticism," Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said on CNN's "State of the Union" program. "We all get disappointed from time to time at the outcome in courts on things that we care about. But I think it is best to avoid criticizing judges individually."

Republican Sen. Ben Sasse, a vocal critic of Trump, was less restrained.

"We don't have so-called judges ... we don't have so-called presidents, we have people from three different branches of government who take an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution," he said on the ABC News program "This Week."

White House adviser Steve Bannon had some advice for the news media. GETTY IMAGES

TRUMP'S AMERICA

MAKING AMERICA SHUT UP AGAIN

TRUMP'S AMERICA

ELLIS HENICAN
@henican

Two weeks in, it's already time for a slogan retreat. "Make America Great Again" is quickly giving way to "Please Shut Up Now!" — without the please.

New petition signatures aren't being counted on the White House website. The "We The People" page, where Americans can "speak directly to the government," hasn't been working since President Donald Trump moved in. And no one's answering the White House comment line.

The rising zip-it call is being sounded from Trump Tower and the White House switchboard, all the way to Berkeley, Seattle and even Mar-a-Lago, pretty much anywhere the new president or his posse face criticism of any kind.

Why be bothered with a bunch of whining critics? They'll never have anything nice to say, anyway.

In his short time in office, Trump has rarely missed a chance to demand that someone else put a cork in it. After the Women's March, he tweeted: "Was under the impression that we just had an election! Why didn't these people vote?" When campus protesters romped in Berkeley, he didn't only threaten to arrest the lawbreakers, he vowed to cut off federal funds for the entire university. Maybe that'll quiet 'em!

In Trump's America, silence from others is definitely golden again, just like a certain Fifth Avenue tower and a pair of Donald J. Trump Signature Collection Cufflinks ($100 plus $4.99 shipping on Amazon).

Steve Bannon, the official White House id, really set the tone when he snarled that the media ought to "keep its mouth shut and just listen for a while."

I thought there might be hope here. Then, I called 202-456-1111, the popular White House comment line.

Turns out the White House comment line isn't taking comments anymore. A recording said try a website or Facebook Messenger, though the White House Facebook page didn't seem to be taking messages either.

California Congresswoman Jackie Speier has a bill, the Phone the White House Act, cutting off funds to the Executive Office until the comment line is restored. "The president needs to recognize that his job also includes listening to all Americans, not just the echo chamber in the White House," Speier said.

How much longer till the president has an answer for her? Shut up now!

Louvre attacker refuses to speak to investigators

"The first interview took place this morning, but it turned out to be a short one. For the moment, he refuses to talk to investigators."

The source at the prosecutor's office

The 29-year-old arrived in France on Jan. 26 after obtaining a tourist visa in Dubai. Egyptian security officials have not said whether he had any known links to militant groups.

The machete-wielding attacker who was shot by a soldier outside France's Louvre museum refused to answer investigators on Sunday after being formally placed into custody at a hospital, a source at the Paris prosecutor's office said.

Abdullah Reda al-Hamahmy, an Egyptian, was shot several times on Friday after attacking soldiers as he cried "Allahu Akbar" in what French President Francois Hollande described as a terrorist attack.

"The first interview took place this morning, but it turned out to be a short one. For the moment, he refuses to talk to investigators," the source at the prosecutor's office said.

Hamahmy's father told Reuters it was "non-sense" to suggest his son was a terrorist, saying that the youngest of four children was a law graduate who had been working in the United Arab Emirates for about five years and was in Paris on business.

Hours before the Louvre attack, an entry on Hamahmy's Twitter account was posted reading: "Why are they afraid of the establishment of an Islamic state? Because the country of Islam will defend its resources and territory and the honour and dignity of Muslims."

Reuters could not independently verify the authenticity of the tweet and the account has since been shut down.

The incident underlined the Islamist militant threat facing France, which is still under a state of emergency as presidential elections loom following a series of attacks over the past two years that have killed more than 230 people.

Hamahmy's father,

Reda Al Refaai, in an interview on Saturday accused French officials of fabricating the allegations against his son to excuse the force used to stop him.

Asked if his son had shown Islamist militant tendencies, the retired police major general said: "If he had I would have thrown him out of the house."

French investigators are hunting for clues to establish whether he acted alone, on impulse, or on orders from someone. He attacked troops checking bags near the museum's shopping mall with a machete in each hand, wounding one soldier.

Hamahmy's father said he last spoke to his son a few hours before the attack and that they had discussed what colour hat Hamahmy should buy to protect him against the cold weather of Paris.

He said he heard the news of the Louvre incident via Facebook. Shortly afterward, police came to his house to ask some questions before leaving. REUTERS

Kylie Minogue and Joshua Sasse are over and done

Iconic pop star Kylie Minogue confirmed her breakup with Joshua Sasse in an emotional Instagram post Friday.

According to Huffington Post, just days before she announced the split Minogue was gushing about her upcoming nuptials and dishing on taking her partner's last name.

The 48-year-old singer met Sasse on the set of "Galavant," in 2015, in which Sasse played the titular character and Minogue guest-starred. I saw that episode. It was really good. I mean their chemistry didn't give me chills or anything, but it was really good.

Sasse was rumored to be getting close to Spanish actress Marta Milans, and that may have caused the split.

In her Instagram post, Kylie wishes her ex the best, which is really big of her. What a cool, mature lady. It wouldn't be me.

But in happier news, Minogue recently won a battle against Kylie Jenner, who was attempting to trademark their shared name, and thank goodness. We're forever #Team-Minogue on this one.

Kristen Stewart dropped the F-bomb on 'SNL'

Kristen Stewart made her debut as host and was visibly very pumped. So much so she dropped the F-bomb on live television! Go girl. But the best part of her opening monologue was her take down of President Trump — who has a history of obsessively trolling her on Twitter. He's tweeted about her 11 times!

To enrage him some more, the "Twilight" actress gleefully declared herself as "so gay, dude." We can't wait to see how he'll spin this.

But that wasn't it: Melissa McCarthy debuted her Sean Spicer impression and it was terrifyingly spot on.

The actress is hands-down the best person to play the intense Spicer. Also, someone congratulate the wig department on "SNL," because they got Spicer's extreme side part very, very right.

Rooney Mara and Joaquin Phoenix are an item

I said it before, and now it's official: Rooney Mara and Joaquin Phoenix are for real, for real.

The Daily Mail has exclusive pictures of the eccentrically named duo running errands together — and I mean, you don't let paps just photograph you with paper bags in your arms unless you mean it.

The two actors supposedly started a romance on the set of "Mary Magdalene," a film that is ironically being referred to as a biblical epic. What do those words together even mean? Phoenix is playing the role of Jesus, and Mara is playing the titular role of Mary Magdalene.

So what shall we call then? Roonquin? Joaquiney? I mean, if a couple can't be named, there's no way they can last. I just wish celebrity couples would think about these things before getting together, you know?

Jeffrey Tambor and Gronk face off for the Super Bowl

The odd couple teams up for Tide.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Jeffrey Tambor is a legendary funnyman, from "The Larry Sanders Show" to "Arrested Development." On Super Bowl Sunday, the Emmy-award-winning "Transparent" actor did his thing opposite the New England Patriots' Rob "Gronk" Gronkowski in a spot for Tide.

The 72-year-old actor called in from Houston for the big game to talk about dabbing (really), his debut memoir "Are You Anybody," and how he has no idea what "bro-ing out" is.

What was it like hanging out with Gronk?

Oh, Gronk was great, we were just talking about how charming he was. And what a good actor he was. He was terrific. He's like a little kid. A tall little kid. A little tall kid.

Did you bro out together?

I don't even know what you're talking about. I don't think I've ever "bro-ed out." What does "bro out" mean? You can write about this: "Jeffrey Tambor has no idea what a bro out means." What is a bro out? I want a definition.

We should probably ask Gronk.

Let's move on. What's that thing you do when you drop the mic?

A mic drop?

No, dab. Someone had to teach me about dabbing the other day. You and I have no idea what we're talking about. I'm 70. How old are you?

30.
See, that's the problem.

We're big fans of "Transparent." What's in store for Maura heading into Season 4?

We just had our first table read literally three days ago. It was amazing, everyone just burst into applause. I don't know all that much, I'm not being coy — and I ask not to know, I like to be surprised. It's going to be a great season.

We read that you and ["Transparent" costar] Judith Light have been close friends for decades. What's it like working with her on the show?
She's great. She's one of the great actresses. We've known each other for many years, we did theater together at the Milwaukee Repertory Theater when we were little kids. Now she plays my wife [on "Transparent"]; she's truly an artistic killer.

Her performance of "Hand in Pocket" in the Season 3 finale was a tour de force.

That was one of the most amazing moments I've ever seen. I was literally on the ship when she sang that and I remember there wasn't a dry eye in the house.

Any upcoming projects you'd like to tell us about?

I have a book that's coming out called "Are You Anybody." It's sort of a memoir, based on a member of the press who came up to me one day outside the Broadhurst Theater and said, "Are you anybody?" and I said, "No."

Is this memoir your first time writing?

It is my first time writing. I own a bookstore [Skylight Books in L.A.], do you know that? I've always been a big fan of writers. This is like a life dream, because on May 16, I'll be able to read my own book in my own bookstore.

What was it like filming "The Death of Stalin" in our current political climate?

[Director] Armando Iannucci has a great sensibility. It's very funny, it's very frightening, it's very sad. It's like one moment you're doing "King Lear"; the next, "The Ropers." It's the craziest script I've ever seen. I love it. I would work with Iannucci anywhere, anytime.

Is there anything you wish you'd get asked in interviews that you'd like to talk about?

Well, let's see: the loss of hair, I'd love to talk about. My father cried when I went bald, that's a true story. Oh, they want me to say Tide. You know, this is quite a moment. I will this Sunday be seen by close to 180 million people. That's more than dinner theater, I can tell you that.

Kathryn Hahn does the Super Bowl

The "Bad Moms" actress is the voice behind an ad about smelly bathroom breaks.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

While you were watching the game this Sunday, you might recall seeing a new commercial that's basically about taking a dump during halftime. It comes from Febreze's new OdorClear, and the tagline is "I love you, half-time bathroom break, but sometimes you stink."

The comically somber voice delivering that line is actress Kathryn Hahn. Although the 43-year-old is new to voice-over work — she jokes that she did her best Ken Burns impression for the campaign — as an actress she's known equally for her dramatic and comedic turns: as the graceful and reserved Rabbi Raquel from the Emmy-award winning "Transparent" or the over-the-top Carla in "Bad Moms."

She stars in another joint from "Transparent" creator Jill Soloway: "I Love Dick," which premiered at Sundance and streams this May (you can watch the pilot on Amazon Prime now).

We caught up with the L.A. resident to chat about whether Rabbi Raquel will be back on "Transparent," the "Bad Moms" sequel, and why she's not on social media.

As an actress, would you say your roots are in comedy?
Not at all. I never took a sketch class, I never took an improv class. I was a big theater nerd, I just wanted to do plays. I was playing Ma Joad in "Grapes of Wrath" in undergrad. [Laughs] I never thought that it would be comedy. I was always the class clown I guess, but I never — the idea of trying to be funny is a nightmare to me. I guess I'm just a weirdo enough, if I ground it in some sort of reality, it works. But I love to do it all.

Soloway said at Sundance that "I Love Dick" is about "the invention of the female gaze." Watching the pilot, it was hard to tell whether your character is empowered, or rendered powerless by her desire for Dick (Kevin Bacon).
I think she's pushing through her desire, owning her desire. In her obsession, I think she realizes that it's not about him at all, and her desire and artistic expression are tied in the same thing.

[At the same time] it's so human that the people who are sometimes the worst to us are the most attractive.

We have to ask: Will we see Rabbi Raquel in "Transparent" Season 4?
I don't know about Season 4, because she's submerged in Marfa, Texas, for a second. [Laughs] She went into the mikvah and out of the cistern. But, we've not seen the end of the rabbi, for sure, no. But I definitely think that we needed a breather after the end of last season; she was pretty devastated.

And you have the "Bad Moms" sequel coming up.
Yeah! We were all really surprised and so thrilled. It just affirmed our spidey sense that there is an audience for this kind of movie, and that the mommas were excited to have something to see. When we heard the germ of the idea, that it's going to be Christmas-themed, we were like, "Ah of course." There's not another time of year that women are more expected to make magic happen while they're flipping out, stressing out trying to get stuff done.

On a personal note: We noticed you're not on social media.

I just got an iPhone, I'm a step behind. But I'm really protective of it, I really like not having it. I like the nonaccess. For me personally, my life as a mom, I don't know what I would gain from it. I do go on it, though! There's a line in "Afternoon Delight" [the 2013 Jill Soloway film starring Hahn] where Rachel says, "I'm not on Twitter, but I lurk."

And she gets drunk and she's like, "What even is the cloud?"
I'm still, meanwhile, confused about the cloud. [Laughs]

Early financial-aid letters shake up college decisions

The road to college has turned into an autobahn for some high school seniors this year.

BETH PINSKER
letters@metro.us

While the official deadline for making a college decision is May 1, thousands of students across the United States already have been admitted to the schools of their choice. Many also have received financial aid offers, thanks to a new timetable from the Department of Education, which moved up the start date for the Free Application for Federal Student Aid to Oct. 1 from Jan. 1.

Yet making an educated decision about which school to attend is hard for admitted students because financial aid information is not available from all of them.

Traditionally, colleges distributed financial aid letters to admitted students in mid-March. But some institutions, such as Kalamazoo College in Michigan and the University of Denver, moved up their financial aid award notifications as well, sending out letters to admitted students immediately. College funding expert Mark Kantrowitz, publisher at Cappex.com, estimated that half to two-thirds of colleges are sending out some kind of real award letters to already-accepted students.

It has not been easy for schools to juggle the new deadlines. The College of Wooster, a Scottish-Presbyterian institution in Wooster, Ohio, had to accelerate all sorts of other deadlines in order to get aid letters out in January to the first batch of accepted students.

"It was an organizational challenge," said W. Scott Friedhoff, Wooster's vice president for enrollment and college relations. And not just for the institution: "Now families have to be a little more alert about deadlines that have changed."

The intention of the new timeline is to provide a bigger window for consideration of financial options. In particular, families can appeal for more aid if they feel the award is not adequate, Kantrowitz said.

The timeline benefits some schools too. Indiana Wesleyan University in Marion, Indiana, is using the new calendar to counter competitors who give out merit aid. In the past, the students it coveted were already spoken for by the time the school sent out need-based offers.

"This levels the playing field for bottom-dollar costs," said Thomas Ratliff, the school's associate vice president.

More time also gives high school seniors a chance to revisit schools and deliberate their options.

Another potential negative exists for the type-A student who is driven, anxious and unable to wait. Okun has a client who got into her dream school, the University of San Francisco, and received her award letter. But she is not celebrating yet because she has to wait for award letters from the other six schools on her list.

"I keep telling her, 'I know it's hard,'" Okun said. "But talk to the school, revisit, and decide if you can really afford it."

From 25 points down to five-time Super Bowl champions, the Pats went through the full gambit of emotions Sunday night. GETTY IMAGES

PERFECT FINISH FOR A PERFECT BOSTON STORY

This year's Patriots were so perfectly Boston.

In beating the Falcons in Super Bowl LI Sunday night in Houston, the Pats extended their middle finger to the rest of the NFL, just like Bostonians enjoy nothing more than giving the rest of the country a giant F-U at every opportunity.

Now Bill Belichick has always been one of us. He's gritty, he's no nonsense, he doesn't care about what the rest of the country thinks of him, and most important, he has that Will Hunting, I'm-so-much-smarter-than-you-it's-not-even-funny air about him. We love that.

Well, with his record fifth Super Bowl win Sunday night (seven in total if you want to count his time as an assistant with the Giants), there is absolutely

Matt Burke is the National Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US.

Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro no doubt any more. Belichick is the greatest football coach who ever lived.

As for Tom Brady, as hard as it is to recall a time like this today in 2017 – Brady wasn't exactly always "one of us."

In 2011, ESPN.com published an article with a headline that read, "The growing gulf between Tom Brady and his fans." The sub-head of the article simply read, "Bradywood." There were similar articles published about glamor-boy Tom in the mid-2000s.

In the ESPN piece, New England Sports Museum curator Dick Johnson was quoted as saying, "I don't think anyone could imagine having a beer with Tom Brady. There's a distance there."

Suffolk University historian Robert Allison also talked about why many Boston fans were hesitant to go all-in on perfect Tom in the ESPN piece.

"We like people who have flaws," Allison said. "Because we have flaws."

At this time, Brady was married to Gisele, he did Uggs commercials and he vacationed in Costa Rica, not the Cape. It wasn't exactly Larry Bird pounding Bud Heavys with fans at the Scot 'n Sirloin kind of stuff.

But then, Deflategate happened, and Brady got absolutely railroaded.

Brady suddenly had A-holes in New York (of all places) telling him that he — perfect Tom — was in the wrong and that he would have to go to court to attempt to prove his innocence.

It had finally happened. The jealousy of the rest of the country and the rest of the NFL toward the Pats had gotten so out of hand, so out of whack – that alternative facts were created by league higher-ups in order to "get Tom" and in order to "get" the Patriots.

Brady was dragged through the mud on a global stage, and during that time, something funny happened. Brady became a certified Bostonian.

Boston rallied behind Brady like no other athlete in the history of this city. "Brady!, Brady!, Brady!" chants became the norm at home games, and "12" became Boston's favorite number.

Ten years ago you could walk around Gillette and there were be a potpourri of player jerseys. Hey, there's a Brady jersey. Hey, there's a Bruschi jersey. Hey, there's a Harrison jersey. Hey, there's a Moss jersey. Hey, there's a Laurence Maroney jersey.

Now? I'd say the ratio is 15 Brady jerseys for every one "other."

Having won his fifth Super Bowl trophy – the most ever for a QB – on Sunday, Brady cemented himself as the greatest quarterback of all-time. The combination of his career stats and the number of wins and rings he now owns makes that a terribly hard case to argue against.

But even before Sunday's victory, Brady had laid claim to another exclusive title: Most beloved Boston athlete of all-time.

It took that endless poop-storm known as Deflategate to get here, but here we are.

Now? It's time to crush some celebratory Bud Heavys with No. 12 in this parade coming up.
